Hi Mike,

There are a few changes going on with the website's that are requiring us to re-look at the sites. Bill sent you some information in late June regarding the changes and what need to be looked at. I have since looked at the site as well and have a number of questions/concerns regarding the Columbia Falls website. Betsy and Sandy have directed us to ensure the websites are being updated. I've attached the website's current information that needs to be reviewed and have tracked my suggested changes. Couple things:

1. This may have been done when Robert was updating the sites but we don't think it's appropriate to direct the public to contact EPA's contractor's to submit comments.
2. Any document's we're making available on our website should be accessed via SEMS not the contractor's website.

Is the "Draft Phase 1 Data Summary Report" in SEMS? If so we'll need for it to populate on the web which Bill can help with. If we're no longer taking comments on the draft document then we need to move this language from the "Announcement and Key Topics" section to "What Is Being Done to Clean Up the Site" and provide an update of what came of the draft report. We also should try to add something new to the "Announcement and Key Topics" if there are any.

Under "Community Resources" it states:

"EPA distributes regular email updates, holds community meetings, and organizes other public events to involve the public in the Superfund process."

Could you add me to these email updates? I'm not aware of any specific meetings EPA has held in some time although I'm sure there have been some. Seems to be more the RP that's holding meetings than EPA at this point. I am noticing increasing interest in this site whether it's the locals or Congressional so we may want to consider a future EPA meeting or availability session to update the community about site activities. Get at the broader community than those attending the RP meetings. I plan to have the new CIC out of Helena support the site so maybe after that person is hired on and gets familiar with the site.

In the meantime can you review the attached and add any suggested updates.

Thanks, Libby
